

HISTORY

The gated community of Mira Vista lies approximately seven miles west southwest of the Fort Worth Central Business District with Hawthorne Park Estates and Monarch Hills to the north of Mira Vista. Both are included in the 1872 Nathan Proctor Survey and the 1874 John F. Heath Survey. Vista Ridge and Trinity Heights lie just outside the gates to the south of Mira Vista. The area is bounded by Bryant Irvin Rd. on the east, Dirks Rd. on the South, the Clear Fork of the Trinity River on the west and Bellaire Dr. S. on the north.

Mira Vista, Hawthorne Estates, Vista Ridge and Trinity Heights were part of the Rall Ranch, founded by E.G. Rall in 1917. The 2,500 acre ranch extended from what is now Winscott Rd. in Benbrook on the west to the old Granbury Rd. on the east. The original rock ranch house, which the family called the camp house, stood on land called the Cliffs that is now under water just below the south side of the dam of Benbrook Lake. They believe the house may still be standing in that deep part of the lake, now a house for catfish. The Benbrook Dam and part of the lake covered about 600 acres of Rall land.

After World War II, before the dam and lake were built, a new ranch house was constructed on the westernmost knuckle knoll of the ranch with a kitchen window view of Pecan Valley, which is now a golf course. The ranchers called the hills on the ranch knuckle knolls because they resembled knuckles to them. That ranch house was torn down in about 1994 to make room for more new homes in Mira Vista, however the street where it stood is named Old Homestead Road. E.G. Rall died in 1944, but his son Budge Rall and his family occupied the new ranch house until the property sold to the Mira Vista developers in the 1980s.

The ranch property was very rough. The only way to cross it was by horseback, jeep or pickup truck. Dirks Road was a dirt trail. Most of Mira Vista is in what was called the Big Pasture, with some of the lower areas on the west in what was the north and south Dixon fields, named for a family named Dixon who apparently lived there in the very early days. A bull pasture was near Dirks and Granbury Roads.

NEIGHBORHOOD DESCRIPTION

Mira Vista is a gated community with guards at the gates and a golf course running throughout the neighborhood. Lakes, bluff lots with views, a nature trail and winding roads make for a very scenic area. Trees in the lower areas and newly planted trees everywhere add to the ambience. A country club with a pool and golf memberships is a drawing point. Houses vary from large mansions to garden homes, predominantly two story.

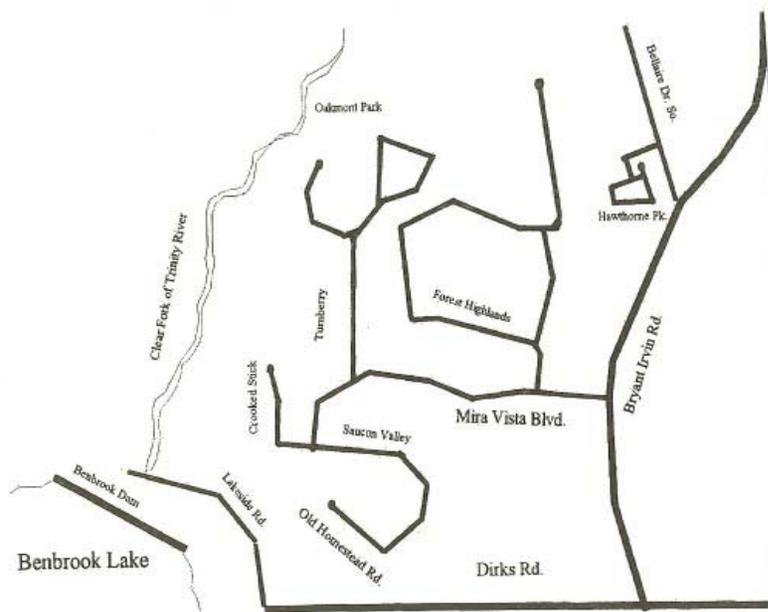

Hawthorne Park Estates and Monarch Hills, just north of the Mira Vista gates, have hilly streets and mature trees, most of which were saved by the builders.

Vista Ridge and Trinity Heights which are south of the Mira Vista gates, are also gated communities just off Bryant Irvin Rd.
